- 9 Sample answer: Gulliver would view a big city like a large model. Factories, churches and other large buildings would be approximately his height and cars and people would look like ants and other insects. He could probably see the whole city as he would be taller than most buildings except some sky-scrapers.
- 10 Sample answers: The emperor was intrigued to see Gulliver and seemed to treat him with respect and kindness, giving him food and drink. Some of the townspeople were aggressive towards Gulliver because they were frightened of him, but the emperor was not happy with their behaviour. He appeared to trust Gulliver.
- 11 Sample answer: Gulliver appears to be in an attractive country where he can see far into the distance because of his height. The scene is from the old days, perhaps two hundred years ago. He can see miles of hills and rolling countryside, but is resting close to a town or city, which houses the emperor’s palace and many townspeople. I think the weather is warm and sunny, and the country is quite affluent, as they have large quantities of food and drink to give Gulliver.

Punctuation Test – Correct text

Anna is digging in the ground for a potato, when along comes Paul. Paul looks to see what Anna's doing and then, seeing that there is no one in sight, starts to scream as loud as he can. Paul's angry mother rushes over and chases Anna away. Once his mum has gone, Paul walks over and helps himself to Anna's potato. Does this ring a bell? I'm sure it does. We've all experienced annoying tricks when we were young.

Spelling Test – Correct text

These animals are African baboons, and playing tricks is as much a part of monkey behaviour as it is of humans. Throughout nature, tricks like this are common – they are part of daily survival. There are insects that hide from their enemies by looking like leaves or twigs, and harmless snakes that imitate poisonous ones. Some animals, however, go further and use a more deliberate kind of deception – they use normal behaviour to trick other animals. In most cases, the animal probably doesn't know it is deceiving, only that certain actions give it an advantage. But in apes and some monkeys the behaviour seems much more like that of humans.
